The Story of Van Kampen Investments

Van Kampen traces its roots to the origins of two entrepreneurial investment managers who later joined to form one of the nation's premier money managers.

The first of those firms was founded in 1927 and would eventually come to be known as American Capital. During its long history, American Capital established its reputation as both a mutual fund pioneer and a premier manager of equity investments.

The second firm was founded by a young, ambitious Chicago native named Robert D. Van Kampen. At age 21, Mr. Van Kampen went to work selling bonds for a local investment firm and before long earned the nickname

“The Charger” for his inspired sales abilities. Spurred by his success, he began laying plans for the company that would become Van Kampen Merritt.

Van Kampen Merritt quickly established itself as a leader in unit investment trusts and municipal bonds. By the mid-1980s, the firm's rapid growth fueled its entry into the mutual fund business, which in turn laid the groundwork for its 1994 merger with American Capital.

Today, Van Kampen Investments offers investors decades of expertise in both the equity and fixed-income markets, vast international capabilities, and a wide variety of investment products.
